

Short Biography

Lew Stowell has a BA degree in English from Norwich University. He spent 31 years in the U.S. Army and the Vermont National Guard most of which as a helicopter pilot flying 3500 hours without an accident. He worked in the state crime commission developing a state wide communications system for state, county and local law enforcement. He worked in private industry as a real estate broker and a technical writer. Some of his technical writing projects included systems for the B-1B bomber and F-16 replacement engine manuals. He has worked for Vermont Emergency management as a Radiological Emergency Response Planner since 1995. Because of the small RERP staff in Vermont he has worked on all aspects of the RERP program including project management. He was an Incident Command System (ICS) instructor for a number of years. Additionally because of the small emergency management staff in Vermont Lew has responded to all types of incidents in various capacities.